The Elevator Speech

Bad:

"Hi, I'm Shannon Brenner, I am a career counselor. I hold a Master's Degree in Education and have five years of experience in career development. (Who cares!) I've worked for a nonprofit career center, and am a certified teacher. (So what!) I believe that career coaching can be the catalyst to change your life. (Are you asleep yet?)"

See how that was all about me, me, me?

Better:

"Hi, I'm Shannon Brenner, and I help excellent candidates find excellent jobs. For example, I've helped a client change jobs with a 40% salary increase, I've helped a client develop the skills to deal with a difficult boss, and I've helped a manager devise new ways to keep her staff motivated."

Here are a few more examples:

An Avon representative who says: "I help women look beautiful."

Or a business coach that says: "I help you get more clients than you know what to do with."

Used by an IRS agent: "I'm a government fund-raiser."

Action Steps

So, here's what you need to do to craft your elevator speech.

First, write down the "deliverables" -- the services or features that you provide. Then, think in terms of the benefits that your clients or employer could derive from these services. You could use several successful client outcomes, as I did.

Once you've got that written, create an opening sentence that will grab the listener's attention, as our Avon representative did above. The best openers leave the listener wanting more information. And you do not have to include your title, especially if you think it has a negative connotation (an IRS agent, for example).

Finally, your elevator speech must roll off your tongue with ease. Practice your speech in front of the mirror and with friends. Record it and listen to it. Do you sound confident? Sincere? Is it engaging? Tweak accordingly. Then, take it on the road!

Elevator Speech

Why is an Elevator Speech important?
Let's assume you're in an elevator -- you meet a potential employer in an elevator on the ground floor. She asks you what you do. You have an opportunity to make your best shot before getting to the bottom floor where you both get off. If you have a polished elevator speech, then by the time you're on the top floor, you'll be the most interesting person in the building. And you may just land that job.

The elevator speech is a concise explanation of who you are and what you do that he can give quickly and easily. It's a great way to keep your resume from being overlooked.

You can also use your elevator speech as the basis for your next job interview, where you'll have to tell the interviewer about your story, but still need to be organized, focused, compelling, impress and memorable.

Important Topics for an Elevator Speech
What do you need to cover in your personal elevator speech? Basically, you need to introduce yourself, your company, and the position you're applying for. Remember to keep it brief, to the point, and unique to set yourself apart from the competition and set the stage to build a new relationship.

Craig Hartman, a California corporate trainer specializing in communications skills and author of "Your Elevator Speech to the Top," says your elevator speech can be just a few sentences long and can be used in many situations, such as at networking events, during a meeting, or when giving a speech or delivery of any kind.

He advises, "The goal is to stand out from the crowd, to be memorable."

For example, if you are looking for a job in marketing, your elevator speech should touch on your p-experience: marketing knowledge, communications skills, vendor management, press and industry relations, web channel marketing, product development and computer skills.

Ask who you should be in touch with for more information. I never married architectural engineering and remained for a long time fascinated by the structural design choices. It's nice to meet you. The position, the type of listener and the desired effect must be considered. Offer examples and explain how your points can benefit listener.3. Describe the unique benefits of your products and explains all the advantages your company could have beyond competition.4. Sellers will often make a presentation using a video watching. Remember to remain positive and on the point. With the introduction out of the way, it's time to move to your past experience on the point and the unique and original of skills.5.6.7.8. "My qualities and the hobbies I have are perfect for this position. Remember to close your pitch with an invitation to an action by distributing a business card, sales material or a Headstart elevator. Sales Elevator.8.
